Flee in Panic to Cellars

After a series of small but air explosions aboard the blazing ship Lalla, residents in Charlestown living within a half mile of the fire took refuge in their cellars in fear of a monster blast.

Police cleared the streets near the Little Neck docks in the heart of the ship might explode and rock the neighborhood breaking glass and hurling flaming embers.

The fire on the bridge, with no chance to go down the ramp leading to the docks.

Boston & Maine Railroad employees, using hoses on the docks, fought desperately to save them. One of the larger freight houses was loaded with part of the Lalla's nitrate cargo. It was said, and fear spread that flying flames would ignite that.

The fireman was back in the fight by now and the fireboat Dowd had joined her. With the closing of the bridge docks of pieces of fire apparatus from how far turned streams on the flames.

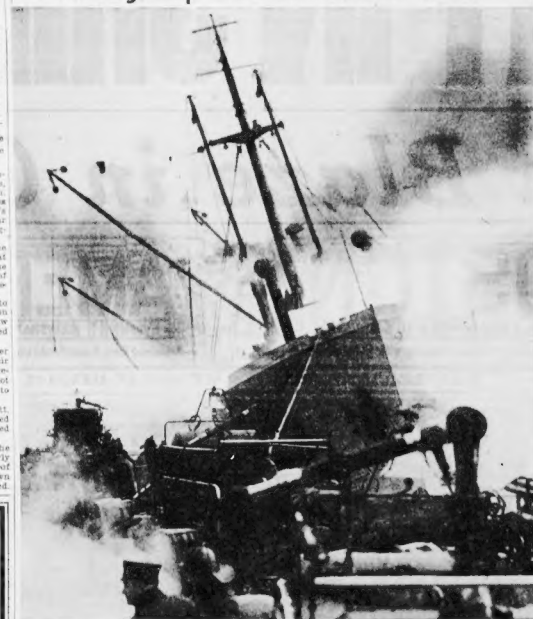

The Lalla was being heavily to pier as tons of water poured in on her and her low slowly sank below its waterline, but the fire raged on, apparently unabated.

But, under a curtain of water that almost swept them from their feet, waters from the tugs and firemen from the firehouse finally got enough lines fast to the Lalla to pull her away from her berth.

Apparatus from Chelsea, Everett, Somerville and Cambridge arrived there as a fifth alarm was sounded for Boston.

With the extra apparatus on the scene and the Lalla being towed into midstream, the peril of a general fire on the Charlestown waterfront appeared to have passed.

FIRE HIS WORST EXPERIENCE

Describing his fight with the fire as the "most terrible experience" of his life, Captain William J. Marshall of the Fireboat John Dowd, taken to Haymarket Relief Hospital suffering from serious burns, told the following story to a Boston Evening American reporter:

"It was the most terrible experience. I never had one like it before in all my life. When our fire boat arrived at the scene of the blaze we proceeded to play our hose lines.

"But in about four or five minutes there was a terrific explosion. The boat was terrific. My radio operator, Thomas Keenan (also taken to Haymarket Relief Hospital suffering from burns) and myself were both knocked down by the blast and outpouring of heat.

"As we picked ourselves up, I saw that the top of the pilot house and a canvas on our deck had started to smolder from the heat. When other members of the crew saw this, they cut loose the fire and our boat was moved away."

Burned Seaman Tells How Ship Fire Spread

Clint Hanson, light mate aboard the blazing Lalla, who discovered the fire, and was badly burned, told the following story to a Boston Evening American reporter:

"I was directing part of the crew in the unloading of the nitrate to the wharf when and suddenly I saw smoke coming out of the third hold.

"I know men were working down there unloading nitrate to be brought up on deck. I rushed down there at once and shouted a warning to them. I told them to come up on deck.

"All of us then got our own fire equipment, consisting of extinguishers, water pumps and small hoses. But, after a minute, we saw that it was useless. Then there was an explosion that rocked the boat.

"None of us dived off the ship. We dashed up the gangways to the wharf and sent in the alarm. There were 27 men aboard at the time, three officers and four engineers."

TUNNEL STRIKE HALTS FREIGHT IN CHICAGO

Strikers clamped on the vital transportation system.

Supplies companies faced the problem of turning loose hundreds of trucks on downtown streets, to make necessary deliveries in the event the underground group failed of prompt settlement.

Angus Barabeno, of the strikers' grievance committee, said 97 per cent of the 430 strikers were members of Local 123 of the Chicago Tunnel Lodge or the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees.

Representatives of the strikers and companies sought today to open negotiations.

Strikers, Guards Like Pals at Auto Plants

Detroit, March 10 (AP)—Strikers who are holding plants of the Chrysler and Hudson corporations dug in today for a siege which spokesmen for labor and management alike predicted would be powerful and of short duration.

A straggling outside picket line was the only evidence that other than normal conditions prevailed in the main Hudson plant. This formed company strikers expressed complete confidence, gained the other pickets.

"We are working in complete cooperation with the regulars designated plant protection agencies," explained E. N. Hall, president of the United Automobile Workers' local conducting the strike, "and we are glad to have their aid."

Shutdown strikers in the Hudson plant scattered the plant material in remaining barricades, some up as a member of the strike committee, explained a "barricade" was named the attitude the company would take.

"We have the company's word it will not try to operate any part of the plant until we have capitulated," a member of the plant strike committee said. "There is no need for us to extend our own patrols beyond the third floor quarters we occupy."

Unemployed company men admitted wives and relatives of strikers through a plant gate in an away in which there was a strike of hundreds of strikers. Strikers were not admitted to the plant interior.

At the nearby Chrysler assembly plant, strikers covered with strike through wire gates. They received shelter briefly in garages where company police and union "protection" met side by side.

The question of recognition of the union by the company's bargaining agency of the 67,000 Chrysler employees dominated negotiations.

Fifty-five thousand workers in the nine Detroit plants of Chrysler, in possession of shutdown strikers, were left idle, and others were out of work in factories which supply the automobile industry with bodies and other parts.

The reputation of the three major plants of the Hudson Motor Car Company left another 10,000 men without work.

Washington, March 10 (AP)—The Committee for Industrial Organization's decision to expel local and state central labor bodies led American Federation of Labor officials today to consider expelling the "rebels" means backing John L. Lewis.

MOTHER BECOMES 'BABY' AGAIN AT 61

DEATH PUZZLE TO DOCTORS

Richmond, Va., March 10 (INS)—The weird and tragic story of a 61-year-old mother, whose life suddenly reversed itself and carried her mentally backward through the years until she died in the curled-up posture of an unborn child, was revealed today in the current issue of the Virginia Medical Journal.

Dr. Beverly R. Tucker, eminent psychiatrist, revealed the sad case in a report written for the journal. The woman, who, Dr. Tucker wrote, must have been beautiful when young, lived the protected life of the traditional southern gentlewoman, and, when her husband died and left her with three children, could do little for herself.

It is time something was done to remedy the growing practice to confine to a certain few the benefits of the judge's discretion," he said. "If something is not done, it will soon become a travesty on justice."

Mullins charged that the recent appointment of a permanent judge was made "to further the political and financial interests of the court."

Mullins charged that in two recent cases a Supreme Court justice had appointed receivers "who knew nothing about the cases."

Cripple Kills Self by Hanging

Despite heroic efforts by police, firemen and a physician, George McNamee, a cripple, of Neptune avenue, Roundtable, died after he had hanged himself from a bedroom door.

Time went on and the mother became, in all her actions, a twelve-year-old child. Psychiatrists attempted to halt the progress of the trend retrogression, but to no avail.

Soon, the 61-year-old woman was back in the doll age, wearing short dresses, and enjoying juvenile amusements.

IN ALL, SAVE LOOKS

Apparently, she became mentally a year younger every three months. She took to her bed, stitched dolls desperately, seemed to lose the use of her feet, and tried to crawl.

Her features, however, did not change. To all appearances, she remained an old woman, but her actions were increasingly those of an infant.

Finally, wrote Dr. Tucker, the 61-year-old mother seemed to curl up. Soon, he added, there was no longer room for doubt that her body was assuming the curled-up posture of the unborn child.

Death finally brought an end to the eerie backward progress.

The case was described as the only one of its kind ever recorded.

CIO TO CENTER FIGHT ON GREEN IN N. E.

It is from the New England textile front today plans were being laid to bring nearly 100,000 workers into a compact group under the leadership of John L. Lewis.

The labor general's objective of a 25-hour week was and an 11-cent minimum wage was to be the drive.

Lewis' far-reaching plan of consolidating the nation's 1,200,000 textile workers under one banner was to have its inception in the New England area, particularly in Lowell, where 20,000 textile workers are employed.

As textile strikes in six states faced possibly disruption of power, Boston faced an immediate prospect of having telegraph messengers hope strike for higher wages.

Meanwhile the strike of truck drivers in Chicago was due for a peaceful settlement as union representatives and company officials prepared to go before the State Board of Arbitration and Conciliation today.

UNION MARKS TIME

The textile industry was marking time today until a definite clause for the settlement of workers under the C. I. O. and its affiliate, the United Textile Workers, was established, but leaders in the various New England centers were already beginning to connect working groups together.

Lewis was awaiting the arrival of Henry Jones, national president of the Federation of Women and Wore Workers, who sat in conference with Lewis last night in Washington.

It is expected that damages will immediately arise to confer with Lawrence and officials in regard to the 25-hour week and its minimum wage.

Mit heads have decided to offer any comment on Lewis' plan marking further revelation of the cause he proposes to take.

From Lowell word was received that Anthony Guadagnoli, secretary for the women and worked workers, had already begun a drive to enroll the 200 workers there under the CIO banner.

Another Gibbons Mike, Sharkey
From St. Paul In Fanning Bec

By JACK CONWAY

Jack Gibbons looked the part of the perfect athlete as he tossed punches at "Irish" Jimmy O'Byrne during the closing workout of his training for his ten-round bout with Johnny Duette of Providence at the Egleston Stadium tomorrow night. Jack is 23 years old and weighs 172 pounds.

He's a Gibbons of St. Paul, a genuine "Irish" product," said Mike Gibbons, Jack's dad and one of the greatest middleweights ever to enter a ring.

The 17-year-old boy box in the

It is a tough game, Mike, Sharkey. It is a tough game, Mike, Sharkey. It is a tough game, Mike, Sharkey.

Jack won the Golden Glove championship in the 125-pound weight class at Minneapolis in 1933 and then became a professional. He has had 34 pro bouts and has not lost a fight.

I have tried to teach the fundamentals of the game, Mike, Sharkey. I have tried to teach the fundamentals of the game, Mike, Sharkey.

One of the things in boxing is that most youngsters devote too much time to the knockouts and they don't master the fine points of the game. I think the fact Jack Dempsey is such a popular here is responsible for this condition. Every young fighter wants to be another Dempsey.

Tunney defeated Dempsey by clever boxing. Unfortunately Tunney was not popular. If he had been, every youngster would have tried to emulate Gene in the ring. This condition would have resulted in more and better boxers.

SHARKEY DISCUSSES DEMPSEY BOUT

Mike Sharkey considered the latter one of the best boxers of his time.

"Except when I fought Jack Dempsey," interrupted Sharkey. "I was a young, egotistical kid at the time, and I wanted to knock out the great Jack Dempsey. I almost did so in the first round."

"If I had boxed with greater caution, I would have won easily. My mistakes gave Dempsey his victory."

"How many bouts did you have in your career?" John Buckley asked Gibbons.

"Between 212 and 215 over a 15-year period," answered Gibbons.

"That's a credit fighting for a couple of lifetimes," remarked Sharkey. "I had about 70 professional bouts but I did a few of the big payoffs again. That $25,000 in the Dempsey fight wasn't hard to take."

"I had some good payoffs, too, and now I would like to see young Jack go into the big money," he said.

Mike, Sharkey, I don't consider him a great boxer," Gibbons said in answer to a question. "He holds his jaw high and in the ring. There is a reason for that, though. When he is in the ring, Mike, Sharkey, he is a real fighter."

"I don't know if he is a real fighter or not," Gibbons said. "I don't know if he is a real fighter or not. I don't know if he is a real fighter or not."

"I wouldn't say that," asserted Gibbons. "Bradock has been out of the ring for almost two years. They say he trains regularly and has a real fight against sparring partners once a month. I don't believe these stories."

"There are so many better places to go than a gymnasium, and then a champion doesn't risk getting his clock knocked off unless the money is on the line."

RING RUST FATAL

"I found out what it is to be inactive when I fought Mickey Walker," said Sharkey. "I had been out of the ring 13 months. I thought all I had to do was to walk from my corner and hit Mickey on the chin and call it a night."

"When I didn't stop Walker inside of six rounds, I began to worry over my condition. I coasted for four or five rounds, and was obliged to rally in the closing rounds. I thought I won, but the decision was a draw. A heavyweight should fight three or four times a year. I agree with you, Mike, when you say Louie isn't a great fighter, but the guy is young and has been active in the ring. Bradock, on the other hand, has been living the life of Riley and hasn't fought for almost two years. I think Louie will win."

Andy Callahan, who has started training for his return bout with Sammy Fuller at Mechanics Building on March 22, dropped over to Gibbons to see him.

Callahan will talk fuller this time," Buckley told Gibbons.

INFLATION

Aided by RECENT Trends

By HUGO E. BRADSHAW

The colorful parade of news on wage increases and higher prices for all manner of goods has tended to obscure the part both play in the promotion of inflation.

It does not seem too early in the opinion of this writer, for consideration of the trend and its likely effect on general business conditions in this country.

The primary result of wage and price increases is an inflation of money which is concerned with the amount of money in circulation, not with the value of the dollar. Up to now these have been considered, and not increased, in the same way and not to make rigidly inflationary. It is not until the demand for it by those wishing to beat the game through forward buying.

Those who attribute wage and price increases to the fact that inflation is occurring, and that it is the cause of the increase, are in error. It is not until the demand for it by those wishing to beat the game through forward buying.

Nichols. The earnings available to the public for tobacco companies are furnishing some important evidence of the effect of inflation on the tobacco industry. And also a slight indication of the effect of inflation on the tobacco industry.

The stock market is apparently making up its mind as to how much more it can take in the line of inflated prices. Little or much will be made of it, as a matter of fact, it is not until the demand for it by those wishing to beat the game through forward buying.

National Lead is attracting attention of traders and investors alike on its business prospects. But there is also a powerful buying argument in the large stock of lead metal at which the company has 90 tons at each of its plants.

Charles T. McKenna & Co. is looking to the fact that the company has 90 tons at each of its plants. But there is also a powerful buying argument in the large stock of lead metal at which the company has 90 tons at each of its plants.

Insurance to Pay. Providence Washington Insurance Co. declared regular quarterly dividend of 25 cents per share payable March 29 to stockholders of record.

MOTOR Stocks Stage RALLY STRIKE HOPES FACTOR

New York, March 10.—Development of a more aggressive demand for motors today brightened a stock market up 1 to 4 or more points.

Brokers said the buying pace in the automobile division quickened on Wall Street hopes of a favorable announcement shortly from the Chrysler group.

Investment was a little brisker on Monday morning trading the 200 million dollar Chrysler group.
